Law in the Making: Influence and Change in the Legislative Process (Alex Brazier, Susanna Kalitowski & Gemma Rosenblatt with Matt Korris) (July 2008)

“Law in the Making is a fine piece of scholarship, which is forensic, balanced and informative. It is a thorough exploration of how policy ideas gradually evolve into binding law” – Rt Hon Jack Straw MP

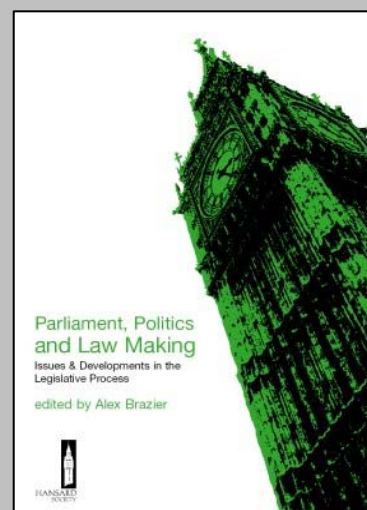

This authoritative study analyses the influences and elements that come together to make an act of Parliament and concludes that the widely-held view of Parliament as a ‘rubber stamp’ for government legislation bears little resemblance to reality.

The research draws upon the findings from five detailed case studies and over 80 exclusive interviews with ministers, MPs, peers, government and parliamentary officials and pressure groups.

Parliament, Politics and Law Making: Issues and developments in the legislative process (Edited by Alex Brazier) (2004)

This work draws together a team of experts including academics, lawyers and parliamentary clerks, to examine the impact of developments to the legislative process in Westminster, assess the impact of constitutional and political changes over on law making in the UK, and identify ways that current system could be improved.

Accessible and informative, Parliament Politics and Law Making will appeal to practitioners and observers alike.
